ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

My greatest thanks go to Randy Scott, of Michigan State University library archives, and the staff in the Interlibrary Loan section. Many of the documents I viewed were difficult to obtain. Special thanks go to David Freeman, who allowed me special access to his papers at the Truman Public Library, and to Thomas Crummett, who got me them. I had an invaluable discussion with Jason Scott, who has collected many of the old FBI serials and has great insight into these early days of the Internet. William Powell was willing to correspond with me about his sources for The Anarchist Cookbook. My best intellectual companion has been Arthur Varsano, editor of the Journal for the Study of Radicalism, who has always steered for balance and sensitive observation. David McBride, of Oxford University Press, was a thoughtful editor and gave many invaluable comments on the manuscript. The anonymous reviewers provided much helpful advice. Richard Bach Jones shared my enthusiasm for the project and tried to talk about historical anarchism and policing. Randall Law urged me to think about terrorism and technology in a broader context. With his probing mind, Paul Samson helped me work out my conclusions. At the eleventh hour, Ronen Steinberg provided me with a few crucial insights. Thanks to Beverly Gage, Claudia Veharova, and Canda Dine, the "terror chicks," for encouraging me from the beginning. This book is built on the work of many fine scholars, too numerous to mention, who have lately been thinking about the histories and consequences of war on terror. I also owe special thanks to Liane Blum Jacob, Jay Jacot, and Mikaela Kai-Moher for giving me the moral support, the meals, and the writing space to get the job done.
